SUPERSTITIONS

WALKING UNDER A LADDER: The early Christians felt the triangle was a sacred sign that represented the Holy Trinity of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. When a ladder was pushed against a building, it would form the shape of a triangle, and thus, by walking under it, you were breaking the triangle. This was such a bad thing to do that early Christians would often label anyone who walked under a ladder to be a witch, in league with Satan.

THROWING SOME SALT BEHIND YOUR SHOULDER: In olden times, it was often said that the devil was always sitting just behind your left shoulder. When you wasted something as valuable as salt, it was important to keep the devil at bay by either blinding him by throwing salt in his eyes or by placating him by giving him an offering of salt.

A pretty, young, Southern gal stood at the bank cashier's window and smiled. "I'd like to cash this check, please," she said, handing it over.

The teller examined the check and said: "Could you identify yourself, Miss?"

For a moment the lovely girl's brow creased over, then with a bright look she fumbled in her handbag and producing a mirror, glanced in it and with relief said, "Yes! It's me all right!"

The clerk said, "I think Ma'am, that you misunderstand me. We require a photo identification."

The girl searched her bag again and found a picture with a group of people. "This is a recent family photo," she proudly explained. "That's me, third from the left."
